*I*t's the same way that John Jacob Astor landed in his entire of former paths for a gamble on uptown Manhattan real estate. Jose Andres-Sosa is landing in North Bay Village, the Miami city that appeared the most in the past five years and one that has the potential to become Florida's new Laguna Beach, Calif.

Andres-Sosa, president and CEO of Domus One Development Group, is a Spanish real estate developer at the forefront of the reconstruction of South Bay Village and the man behind the development of the 21-story building, Equence on the Bay, a condominium on 1.8 acres at 7500 E. Drive on Harbor Island. The name for Miami's new South to invest in the competitive real estate market of South Florida.

"Miami's real estate market is still growing to be a hotbed of activity that has seen strong growth of investment over the last six years," said Andres-Sosa. "Despite reports of a real estate market slowdown, the buyers market created continues to make this a great time to invest in South Florida."
